Jonathan Papelbon Joins MonaVie Distributor Network

[Salt Lake City, UT] – April 26, 2007 – MonaVie, one of the fastest growing companies in the natural products industry, hit a home run today when it announced that Jonathan Papelbon, pitcher for the Boston Red Sox, had joined its independent distributor network.

“As a professional athlete, I get calls and offers for lots of things,” Papelbon said. “I only do those that I believe in, and I believe in MonaVie. I was introduced to their product by my friends Nick Francona and Matt DuBeck, and as soon as I tried it and learned of its nutritional benefits, I was a fan.”

Papelbon, who in 2006 was selected Red Sox Pitcher of the Year and named to the American League’s All-Star team as a rookie, said MonaVie provided the essential nutrients he needed to stay on top of his game.

“Knowing that my arm is my livelihood, I take measures to ensure that it stays healthy. I see trainers every day. I do strength and conditioning exercises every day. And I take MonaVie every day,” he said. “Whether it’s during the off-season, spring training, or the regular season, I’m constantly pushing my body to the limit to get the most from my workouts. MonaVie enables me to give the most to my team at game time.”

Papelbon said he takes every opportunity to explain the benefits of MonaVie to others and encourages those interested to visit his website, www.mymonavie.com/wildthing58.

“Jonathan Papelbon is an amazing pitcher and athlete, and we’re excited that he’s joined our team of distributors,” said Dallin Larsen, MonaVie founder and president.
